1. Assess the view that areas at risk from issues like crime, disease and poverty are also likely to be those most at risk from natural hazards.
2. "Natural hazards are largely predictable, and this is the key to protecting people from their effects." Discuss and evaluate.
3. Using one or more countries you have studied, show how geographical issues and hazards are often spatially clustered.
4. Evaluate the idea that natural hazards may underlie the distribution of other geographical issues, such as poverty, disease and crime.
